PREEMPTIVE LOVE COALITION

Boys in refugee camps are at a particular disadvantage. They are expected to carry most of the weight for their families—finding food, working to provide an income, and protecting their family.

Some must join armed groups to make a wage. Many boys never return to school after being displaced, leaving them with little opportunity for a life outside hard labor and just scraping by.

These boys are ready to rise. But they need help working through trauma woven into the fabric of their lives. They need to catch up on schooling lost to war so they can have hope of opportunities outside of refugee camp fences.

Trained social workers come alongside the most vulnerable cases in our child protection unit—children who are abandoned, who aren't speaking, whose behavior and health are compromised by having their early years defined by violence.

The center provides care from toddlers to teenagers. Recently, this little boy came to our center. His speech was delayed and he wasn't speaking. After some time with counselors and teachers, he said his first word in the center!

With your help, we can nurture young boys to find their voices and to see possibility for the future. They can work through pain unfairly experienced from a young age and gain education that will set them up to rebuild their country.

Give refugee boys possibility.

Thank you for always being in this work with us, knowing that it takes a posture of listening and love to stand with these boys as long as it takes, until they're thriving.

$20/month allows one child to attend the center and receive trauma counseling, literacy support, consistent and nutritious meals, invested and loving staff, and play therapy.

$30 provides a school uniform for one refugee child. Boys especially often labor outside of school to earn enough to purchase their uniform.
