Hi Pamela,

As the founder of Wikipedia, I wanted to thank you for your on-going monthly support of the Wikimedia Foundation and let you know that this year's fundraiser in the US is underway.

You might have already seen banners on Wikipedia asking for donations. We know these banners interrupt your reading. While it may not feel like it, it's a good thing to see these banners — it means we respect your privacy and store very little user data. We simply don't know that it's you when you visit Wikipedia.

As we rally your fellow readers to join you in donating to the mission, please know that we're thinking of you. You're a close friend to the Wikimedia Foundation, Pamela, and we greatly value your support. As a small token of thanks, we're sharing a couple of tips exclusively with our most valued donors (you!) to minimize interruptions to your Wikipedia experience.

Two easy ways to hide the banner:

1 Close the banner

When you see a banner, click the X in the corner (if on a mobile device click "Close") or click the "I already donated" button. The banner from the article you are reading will be removed, but you may still see banners on future articles.

2

Which will automatically store a cookie in the web browser you're using. This cookie will hide all banners for the duration of our campaign*

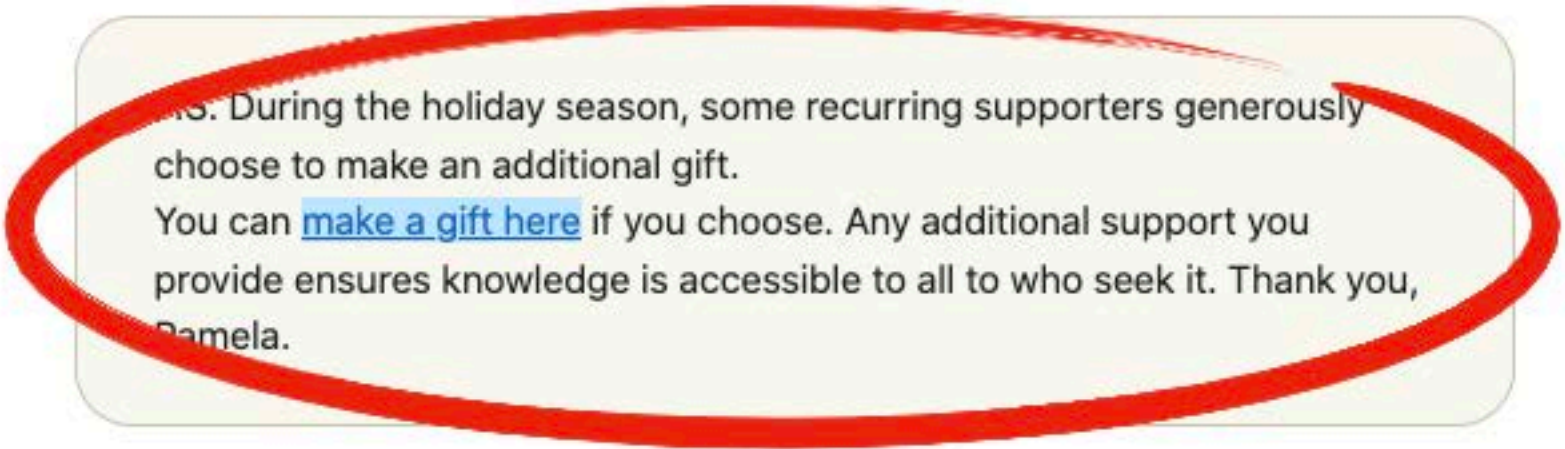

*Please note that banner hiding won't work if you clear your browser's cache or change browsers. If you read Wikipedia on multiple devices, please visit the link on each to suppress banners.

Thank you again for being one of the few Wikipedia users who support our mission with a monthly donation and for understanding the need for these banners. Please reach out to us if you have any questions.

With gratitude,

Jimmy Wales
