

BROUGHT TO YOU BY

Your Fundraising Planner

For your fundraising success, make a plan. Work the plan.

It sounds so simple, doesn't it? And yet a lack of clarity is one of the biggest causes of waste and procrastination in the nonprofit sector.

The writer Antoine de Saint-Exupéry noted that "A goal without a plan is just a wish."

If you don't know what your fundraising goals are for your organization, it's unlikely that

"Peter Drucker is credited with having said "culture eats strategy for breakfast" and so it is perhaps not surprising that culture would be top of this list. If senior management set a plan that is inconsistent with "how we do things around here" it will be doomed to failure from the outset."

-Development Plans & Fundraising Performance

you'll be able to identify and prioritize exactly what you need to work on to achieve those goals.

In 2020, the Institute for Sustainable

Philanthropy, led by Dr. Adrian Sargeant, was commissioned to conduct a survey on the topic of fundraising planning. This comprehensive study indicated a powerful relationship between the degree of formality adopted in fundraising planning and all measures of fundraising performance.

These past several years have been among the toughest in history. We've endured a global pandemic and a harsh exposure of our country's racial and economic injustices. There's one thing that all economists agree on, however. Our economy is going to to get worse before it gets better.

Distractions abound in our sector (and it's only going to get worse). We've just been through a rough year and there's no telling what's coming next. And I'm predicting that above all else, your commitment, focus, and mindset will be what sets you on the path to survive, thrive, and grow in 2024.

If you have any questions, be sure to check out the 2024 roster of Basics & More Fundraising classes to see how your nonprofit can build your own "donor attraction" fundraising systems to see you through any crisis. Or shoot me an email at pamela@pamelagrow.com.

To your fundraising success!

How to Use This Planner

Create a spreadsheet in Excel or your program of choice. Begin by taking a look at your funding sources from a historical perspective.

- 1. How much have you raised in the past from individual donors? Organizations seeking to lessen their reliance on government funding, grants, or events will find that building a broad base of general operating support individual giving is a wise decision. And one of the easiest ways to do that is with a strong donor communications system. If you've typically run two campaigns a year (spring and end-of-year), could you add in a third or even a fourth or fifth targeted appeal? If you publish a print donor newsletter, are you raising revenue with that newsletter? Well-crafted donor newsletters can bring in as much (or more) as a fundraising appeal. What are your plans for increasing donor retention in 2024? For new donor acquisition? How are you bringing back lapsed donors? Write it down!
- 2. What are your goals for increasing your monthly giving or membership? Create S.M.A.R.T. goals, meaning that they're specific and actionable. That means "grow our monthly giving program" becomes "Grow our monthly giving program by 150 new donors by December of 2024 through one direct mail appeal and three email campaigns."
- 3. Does 100% of your board contribute to your mission? If not, create a plan to make it happen.
- 4. Revisit events. A big question going into 2024 will be how your events fared in 2024/2023. Some organizations saw tremendous success going virtual. For others, virtual events were a disaster. Even though it's back to 'business as usual' for many, I urge you to put the least amount of focus on events going into 2024. What plans do you have in place for stewarding event attendees and transitioning them into donors? Write it down!
- 5. Now you'll factor in any state or federal government grant funding. Consider active foundation grants and opportunities in 2024. I've always focused primarily on general operating support. If you're a Development Department of one, you'll find

- grants can take over your life. If you can't focus in on general operating support grants (easier to administer), you may want to consider outsourcing.
- 6. Most of the time we think of business donors in terms of sponsorships. However, you'll also want to consider separate appeals to businesses within your community.
- 7. In "Other," you'll turn your attention to strategies such as earned income. That includes your thrift shop, book sales, eBay sales, branded merchandise and the like. Careful here! Too many nonprofits, especially when they're just starting out, engage in what I call "nickel and dime" fundraising, relying on low level activities like bake sales, Amazon smile, and the like. Keep your focus on growing your individual giving.

When I'm working with clients and students on developing their plans, I like to include both a written plan that emphasizes our missions and values (for example, you should have a solid gift acceptance policy in place), and typically an excel document where you can lay out the strategies, costs, and anticipated income.

Assess your fundraising infrastructure. If you're planning on increasing your digital fundraising in 2024, you'll want to budget for that. Strong online fundraising requires strong systems. If you're cobbling together too many systems, you won't be serving your donors or your organization well. Do you have a donor database and written protocols? Does your website need to be updated? Will you be making any new hires? Real fundraising, the sustainable kind, requires investment.

As a sector we're often "Tripping Over Dollars Picking Up Pennies." Your leadership needs to understand that numerous research indicates that multichannel campaigns are key to growing your donor base.

Your investment in direct mail and donor care will yield solid returns.

You'll want to include your goals and objectives for the year. This includes fundraising targets.

Funding Source	Strategy	Cost	Anticipated Income
1. Individual Donors
2. Members/Monthly
Board Giving
Events
Private Foundations
Government Grants
Business Donors
Other

Now you've got a plan for growing your fundraising in 2024, and the strategies to do it. You'll want to include written plans for your organization's non-financial goals.

- Does your organization have a strong written case for support? In Mal Warwick's brilliant book, Fundraising When Money is Tight: A Strategic and Practical Guide to Surviving Tough Times and Thriving in the Future, Mal urges readers to "reconsider why your donors support you in the first place and reexamine your case for giving in that light." Your donors want to know that you're doing a good job with the money they gave you and they want to see the impact of their support.
- Did you resolve to greater diversity in your board and staff? It won't happen by osmosis. You need to plan for it. If your organization need anti-racism training, I can provide you with recommended consultants. Highly recommended: Freedom School.
- How is your nonprofit attracting new donors and partners? Make a plan and make an investment in acquisition (and donor care).
- Does it make sense to outsource? Time is money. If your development director is spending time wrestling with your local print shop trying to figure out why your Canva files won't work, maybe it makes sense to hire an actual designer for that job.

Similarly, if your "one-person" development department is spending 80% of her time on grants when your goal is to grow your individual giving program, outsourcing may be the answer.

• Is your organization's culture a healthy one? If not, create a plan with documented steps to get there.

Remember, you'll want to keep your plan front and center always. Modify it as needed. When an "opportunity" falls into your lap, consider how it fits into your plan and if it truly is an opportunity. Time is money. And go for big goals in 2024. After all...

You've got this!

About Pam

Pamela Grow is the publisher of The Grow Report, the leading weekly newsletter for small shop fundraisers, the author of Simple Development Systems: Successful Fundraising for the One-Person Shop, and the founder of thefundraisingcalendar.com.

In 2016, Pam partnered with Jeff Schreifels and Richard Perry to lead the creation of the Veritus Group Academy (formerly Major Gift Academy).

Her Basics & More online fundraising classes have trained over 10,000 smart nonprofit professionals all over the world.

Pam's been named one of the 50 Most Influential Fundraisers by Civil Society magazine, and one of the 40 Most Effective Fundraising Consultants by The Michael Chatman Giving Show.

She's mom to two remarkable daughters, an avid reader, baker, progressive, and champion of fundraisers and donors everywhere.

