WIKIPEDIA
The Free Encyclopedia

Dear Pamela,

I just have to tell you how grateful I am  for your generous monthly support. Only 2% of Wikipedia readers donate at all, and even fewer give monthly. Your support is important and has a significant impact.

I know it can be hard to picture that impact, but I see it all the time. With your support, the Wikimedia Foundation is creating the internet we were promised. We develop tools that help our volunteers quickly identify and fix inaccuracies on Wikipedia pages, keeping it up-to-date and reliable. We provide teachers with resources to help their students spot bias in the media. We support librarians to train their local communities to benefit from Wikipedia's vast resources.

In so many ways, your monthly gift helps protect the future of human  knowledge—in 340+ languages, and on every inhabited continent on earth.

I'm writing to you today with a special request: Will you consider adding $1, $5, or $10 to your monthly gift? Your increased commitment will help keep Wikipedia thriving—for you, for the next reader, and for the next generation.

If you aren't able to give any more today, then please let me express my deepest thanks for giving what you can already. And if you are able to pitch in a little more, even a small increase on your $5 monthly gift will make a big impact.

Thank you for your partnership, Pamela. Wikipedia began 25 years ago as a wildly ambitious dream. Today, it is a reality because people like you show up every month to make it better. I'm so grateful we're in this together.

Sincerely,

Lisa Seitz Gruwell
