Dear Pamela,

I have to tell you how grateful I am for your generous monthly support. Only 2% of Wikipedia readers donate at all, and even fewer give monthly. Your support is important and has a significant impact.

I know it can be hard to picture that impact, but I see it all the time. With your support, the Wikimedia Foundation is creating the internet we were promised. We actively fight misinformation, developing tools that help our volunteers quickly identify and fix inaccuracies on Wikipedia pages. We take action when governments try to prevent their citizens from using Wikipedia. We provide tools to teachers to help their students spot bias in the media. We support librarians to train their local communities to benefit from Wikipedia's vast resources.

In so many ways, your monthly gift helps us unleash the power of human knowledge — in over 300 languages, and on every inhabited continent on earth.

I'm writing to you today with a special request: Will you consider adding $1, $5, or $10 to your monthly gift? Your increased commitment will strengthen us in the fight for free knowledge.

If you aren't able to give any more today, then please let me express my deepest thanks for giving what you can. And if you are able to pitch in a little more, even a small increase on your $5.00 monthly gift will make a big impact.
